The Strategic Research and Innovation Agenda (SRIA) and Roadmap on Personalized Prevention

Results of the PeRsOnalised Prevention roadmap for the future HEalThcare (PROPHET) project in the European Prevention Ecosystem

26-27 March 2026, Rome, Italy

Villa Palestro, Via Palestro, 24, 00185 Roma

Event Rationale

Personalized prevention is emerging as a cornerstone to effectively address the growing burden of common chronic diseases in Europe, calling for integrated, data-driven, and sustainable approaches across health systems. The EU-funded project "A Personalised Prevention roadmap for the future HEalthcare in Europe" (PROPHET) has developed the Strategic Research and Innovation Agenda (SRIA) and the Personalized Prevention Roadmap, providing a comprehensive and structured framework to advance personalized prevention at scale.

The SRIA identifies ten core challenges that must be addressed to enable effective, equitable, and system-wide implementation, while the Roadmap translates these challenges into concrete actions, defined across different levels of priority, urgency, and stakeholder responsibility, from European institutions to national and local actors. This strategic framework is aligned with the objectives of Europe's Beating Cancer Plan 2020–2025, reinforcing its relevance within the broader European health policy landscape.

This event provides a dedicated platform to advance the implementation of the SRIA and Roadmap by showcasing the PROPHET actions designed to operationalize personalized prevention across Europe. By bringing together ongoing European research and innovation projects and key stakeholders for personalized prevention, the event aims to promote alignment between ongoing initiatives and the strategic priorities defined by PROPHET. Through structured project exchanges and thematic working groups, participants will explore complementarities, identify opportunities for coordinated action, and define concrete pathways to translate shared efforts into practice. The overarching objective is to strengthen European-level coherence, foster durable synergies, and accelerate the collective transition from strategic planning to tangible implementation of personalized prevention.
